PRESIDENT HARDING DIES SUDDENLY

Nation's Chief Succumbed at San Francisco Last Thursday Evening

Warren G. Harding, president of the United States, died instantaneously and without warning last Thursday night in his suite at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, at 7:30 o'clock a victim of a stroke of apoplexy, which struck him down in his weakened condition after an illness of exactly a week.

The chief executive of the nation, and by virtue of his office and personality, one of the world's leading figures, passed away at the time when his physicians, his family and his people thought that medical skill, hope and prayer had won the battle against disease.

The disease had been conquered, the fire was out, but seven days of silent, though intense suffering had left their mark and a stroke of apoplexy came without an instant's warning and before physicians could be called or members of his official family summoned.

The entire nation was suddenly plunged into gloom when the news of President Harding's death flashed across the continent. The shock was all the more poignant because of the late bulletins of Thursday to the effect that the executive's complete recovery was assured. The sad message was picked up by radio operators in Wellsboro and other Tioga County towns about 11:30 o'clock Thursday night. Following is the bulletin as broadcasted from San Francisco and relayed across the country:

"Presidential Headquarters, Palace Hotel, San Francisco: The President died instantly and without warning and while conversing with members of his family at 7:30 p. m., (Western time) death being due to a stroke of apoplexy. During the day he had been free from discomfort and there was every justification for anticipating a prompt recovery."

It is said that Mrs. Harding was seated by the President's bedside reading to him the various messages of sympathy received during the day when, utterly without warning a slight shudder passed through his frame and the collapse came.

The President's body accompanied by military escort started on its journey across the contipent at seven o'clock Friday evening, arriving at Washington at 1:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

At every city, town and village along the entire route of the funeral train, and even throughout the long stretches of the Western plain, crowds of people offered their prayers as they stood silent and with heads bared watching the funeral train pass. With their prayers for the dead and the living, they offered flowers, elaborately designed floral pieces and bunches of blossoms, to be placed beside the bier in the last car where representatives of the army and navy stood guard.

Upon its arrival in Washington the body was taken immediately to the east room of the White House; thence on Wednesday morning to the capitol where it lay in state until the late afternoon, when the funeral services were held in the capitol rotunda. It then was transferred to a special train for Marion, which left at once, to arrive in the Ohio city this morning where all that is mortal of our President will be finally laid at rest beside his mother.

The news of President Harding's sudden and unexpected death came to Vice President Coolidge about midnight at the home of his father in the little Vermont village where he and Mrs. Coolidge had been sojourning for the past few weeks. The little farm home being without telephone connections it was necessary to transmit the news by special messenger from the telephone line in the village. The messenger was received by the elder Coolidge who immediately roused his son and acquainted him with the sad news, so shocking in its import and transfering to the shoulders of Calvin Coolidge the mantle that slipped from our late President when death called him to his higher destiny.

In spite of the isolation of the drowsing Vermont village the reporters of the city papers were there immediately on the heels of the relayed message and in a very few moments the sitting room in the little farm house was set for the scene that will mark the most important event in its existence

The oath of office prescribed by law for our chief executive was telephoned from Washington and there in that homely sitting room, by the dim light of a flickering oil lamp, Calvin Coolidge was sworn in as President of these United States at 2:45 o'clock Friday morning, his aged father, a notary public, administering the oath in the presence of Mrs. Coolidge, the new first lady of the land, and a few reporters and friends. Thus the simplest inauguration in American history was concluded, simpler even than that of Andrew Jackson, who rode his horse up to the capitol and tethered it to a nearby hitching post while he went upstairs to take the oath.

The first public utterance of the new President, dictated for the use of the reporters, was as follows:

"Reports have reached me which I fear are correct that President Harding is gone. The world has lost a great and good man. I mourn his loss. He was my chief and my friend.

"It is my purpose to carry out the policies which he had begun, for the service of the American people and for the meeting of their responsibilities wherever they may arise.

"For this purpose I shall seek the co-operation of all those who have been associated with the president during his term of office. Those who have given their efforts to assist him I wish to remain in office, that they may assist me,

"I have faith that God will direct the destinies of our nation."

Immediately following the simple ceremony President and Mrs. Coolidge dispatched a message of sympathy to Mrs. Harding and then prepared hurriedly for the trip to Washington where they arrived last Saturday afternoon and established quarters at the New Willard hotel. It is unlikely they will take possession of the White House until next week.

Countless messages expressing regret at the death of President Harding and sympathy for Mrs. Harding poured into the Presidential headquarters at San Francisco and later to the White House. They came from people prominent in this country and from rulers and high officials of nearly every nation in the world.

President Harding's death throws new complexities into the political situation within the Republican party which undoubtedly will have far-reaching reflections in the national convention of next year.

It probably will turn what many expected to be merely a ratification meeting into a contest for the Republican presidential nomination, with the stalwart conservative Republican forces aligned on the one side, and the forces represented by such leaders as Senator Johnson, of California; Borah, of Idaho, and La-Follette, of Wisconsin, on the other.

Whether the party chieftians will wish to use their available machinery to accomplish President Coolidge's nomination is yet to be decided; the events of the next few months while Mr. Coolidge occupies the presidential chair may take the decision out of the hands of the politicians. The leaders still feel they must go before the country with an indorsement of the accomplishments of the Harding administration. The best informed feel they will most likely choose to do it with some member of that administration; some one who had stood close to and for the Harding policies.

Mr. Coolidge faces an ordeal which will tax to the uttermost his intellectual and spiritual powers. In lesser tasks he has shown himself worthy of confidence, and in this he will have what he has earned, the loyal support of his countrymen.

President Coolidge has issued the following proclamation, designating tomorrow, the funeral day of the late President as a day of nation wide morning:

"By the President of the United States, a proclamation.

"To the people of the United States:

"In the inscrutable wisdom of Divine Providence, Warren Gamaliel Harding, twenty-ninth president of the United States, has been taken from us. The nation has lost a wise and enlightened statesman and the American people a true friend and counsellor whose whole purpose of life was inspired with the desire to promote the best interests of the United States and the welfare of its citizens. His private life was marked by gentleness and brotherly sympathy, and by the charm of his personality he made friends of all who came in contact with him.

"It is meet that the deep grief which fills the hearts of the American people should find fitting expression.

"Now therefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, do appoint Friday next, August 10, the day on which the body of the dead president will be laid in its last earthly resting place, as a day of mourning and prayer throughout the United States. I earnestly recommend the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of divine worship, there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God and to pay out of full hearts the homage and love and reverence to the memory of the great and good president, whose death has so sorely smitten the nation.

"In witness, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington, the fourth day of August in the year of Our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, and of the independence of the United States, the one hundred and forty-eighth.

"CALVIN COOLIDGE,
"By the President.
"CHARLES E. HUGHES, Secretary of State."

WELLSBORO'S WEEK OF ENTERTAINMENT

Instructive Program Offered at Chautauqua During the Week of August 18-24

Lest the public lose sight of the fundamental principles underlying the Chautauqua movement, its aims and purposes, we publish the following brief explanation, which shows its tremendous growth, proof positive of its popularity.

The Swarthmore Chautauqua Association was organized in 1912 with 41 towns in 4 States. It now serves 967 towns in 16 States and 4 Canadian provinces. Its charter, issued under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, classifies it as a corporation of the first class (educational institution). Under its charter no pecuniary profit can accrue to any person by reason of his connection with the Association. It is because of the non-profit making character of the Association, and because of its function as an educational institution, that the Federal government has exempted the Association from collecting the war tax on admission tickets of its issue.

The Swarthmore Chautauqua Association was formed for a single purpose of service. It must be self-supporting if it is to continue its work. If it earns a surplus, that surplus must be used for the purpose of improving and extending its work.

It has no purpose but to serve the communities of the central and northern Atlantic States and the eastern Provinces of Canada, by promoting and establishing Chautauqua as an institution of information, inspiration, and optimism.

The Chautauqua this year brings to Wellsboro a well balanced program, diversified in character and made up for the most part of talent of national renown. Under any other circumstances no person would hesitate to pay for a single evening the price charged for the entire course—$3.00. For that sum we can enjoy six days of entertainment and instruction making the cost to us but fifty cents per day.

The people of Wellsboro and vicinity are never slow to take advantage of opportunities offered them along educational lines, for instruction that will serve to broaden their view, and bring them into closer contact with the work of men and women who are prominent in the more important activities of the world today, and for that reason alone we confidently predict the solicitors will "go over the top" in the ticket selling campaign with colors flying.

As in former years the Junior Chautauqua is in charge of competent directors and it is hoped that Wellsboro parents will avail themselves of this opportunity to give the children the advantages secured to them by the expenditure of $1.00 for a junior season ticket. Admissions to the Junior Chautauqua are from six to fourteen years of age. A souvenir will be given with the first 100 junior tickets sold—something the kiddies will enjoy. These souvenirs may be obtained upon application to Miss Martha Yahn.

A new departure is in the nature of a youth's season ticket (for youths from 15 to 18 years of age, inclusive) which may be purchased for two dollars and is good for all afternoon and evening sessions.

A suitable program will be arranged for Sunday, August 19, in which Chautauqua entertainers and the local clergymen will take part.

LETTER FROM LITTLE MARSH.

Explanation Concerning Flag of Alfred Toles Post.

Little Marsh, Aug. 6.—A little explanation and correction to what appeared in your last weeks' Gazette. In regard to the report of statement about Mr. Elias Merrick he is not the last G. A. R. man of Alfred Toles Post, No. 320, as there still remains alive, P. G. Hurlbutt, Andrew Dickinson, Q. Greenfield; also Chauncey Rice and Albert Love, of Wellsboro. There are also six living widows of the original Post members and a host of sons and daughters that regarded the flag as a memorial of their husbands brothers, and fathers and held sacred to their memory. And as to the flag coming into the keeping of Comrade Merrick, it was as follows: The Post was organized in April 1883 and after the first year my husband J. W. French was elected quarter-master, through which office he became custodian of the flag, which office he retained until the Post disbanded about 20 years ago, at the time of his death in September 1913. The flag then remained in my keeping. It then becoming necessary for me to spend the winter with my children six or seven years ago, I thought it proper to ask Comrade Merrick to take the flag and care for it, never thinking that Mr. Merrick and his daughter, Mrs. Strawn, would think they had a right to appropriate the flag to their own personal use. This is written in due honor and sincerity and respect to the memory of Comrade Merrick and the community at large, in respect to the surviving members of Alfred Toles Post, No. 320.

SCOUTS ESTABLISH CAMP FOR MONTH

First Contingent Now at Tiadaghton—Opportunity Still Open to Boys in Vicinity

It will be of interest to the general public and those interested in Boy Scout activities especially to know that the Scout camp at Tiadaghton is now in full operation with more than a score of boys and leaders following the daily program of the Scout Camp. The organization backing the Boy Scouts is entirely a volunteer organization, all the members of which have contributed both time and labor to the making of the project successful. More funds must be raised immediately to assist in financing the projects; and all men and women interested in giving the boys of the town a good training which will make their boys manly, self reliant, and helpful and industrious should co-operate in sustaining the organization.

The first camp being now in full operation, it is time to make arrangements for the second camp which will begin about the middle of August.

All scouts wishing to join the second camp should notify their scout masters or committeemen within a few days if possible so that suitable arrangements may be made for caring for all who go.

Any boy between the ages of 12 years and 18 years is eligible to join as a scout and the camp director announces that new recruits to any of the troops will be given training in the tenderfoot degrees at the camp site if they wish to attend and camp with the regular troops now organized.

A considerable number of boys in addition to those now enrolled can be nicely cared for and all boys of the ages indicated are invited to get the permission of their parents to join the camp as scouts. Scouts do not necessarily have to provide themselves with uniforms. The boys are required to help finance their entertainment at camp to an extent of about half the actual cost of the food etc., amounting to $5 for two weeks. This amount will in most cases be less than it will cost to stay at home.

Blanks for enrollment can be secured at the office of the County Superintendent of Schools, 88 Main Street, Wellsboro, Pa. This is not confined to boys of Wellsboro; but any boy in the vicinity of Wellsboro may join some of the troops with permission of his parents and have two weeks training.

The following is the daily program of the camp and is in charge of a competent director:

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.—Realizing that she has a possible chance of being saved, as the Lusitania is sinking, a stranger gives a young American girl a package which he asks her to deliver to the American ambassador in England. She is saved.

CHAPTER I.—In London, Former Lieut. "Tommy" Beresford and Miss Prudence Cowley—"Tuppence"—discharged army nurse, form an organization, "The Young Adventurers, Ltd." Tuppence makes a business appointment with a man, Edward Whittington, who offers her easy employment, but on giving her name as "Jane Finn," which she had heard on the street, Whittington shows agitation and Tuppence is told to return next day.

CHAPTER II.—In the morning the girl finds Whittington's office deserted, in answer to an advertisement signed "Jane Finn" the two receive notes from "Mr. Carter" and "Julius P. Hersheimmer." Carter is really a high government official. He speaks of a mysterious "Mr. Brown" as head of the Bolsheviks in England, and engages the pair to attempt to find Jane Finn, whom he is seeking for important reasons of state.

CHAPTER III.

Mr. Julius P. Hersheimmer.

Tommy indulged in a chuckle.

"My word! I don't wonder Whittington got the wind up when Tuppence plumped out that name! I should have myself. But look here, sir, we're taking up an awful lot of your time. Have you any tips to give us before we clear out?"

"I think not. I have information that the big coup was planned for early in the new year. But the government is contemplating legislative action which will deal effectually with the strike menace. They'll get wind of it soon, if they haven't already, and it's possible that that may bring things to a head. I hope it will, myself."

Tuppence rose.

"I think we ought to be business-like. What exactly can we count upon you for, Mr. Carter?"

Mr. Carter's lips twitched slightly, but he replied succinctly:

"Funds within reason, detailed information on any point, and no official recognition. I mean that if you get yourselves into trouble with the police, I can't officially help you out of it. You're on your own."

Tuppence nodded eagerly. "I'm sure I don't want to be rude about the government if you've got anything to do with it, but you know one really has the devil of a time getting anything out of it! And if we have to fill up a blue form and send it in, and then, after three months, they send us a green one, and so on—well, that won't be much use, will it?"

Mr. Carter laughed outright.

"Don't worry, Miss Tuppence. You will send a personal demand to me here, and the money, in notes, shall be sent by return of post. As to salary, shall we say at the rate of three hundred a year? And an equal sum for Mr. Beresford, of course. Good-by, and good luck to you both."

He shook hands with them, and in another minute they were descending the steps of 27 Carshalton terrace with their heads in a whirl.

"Tommy! Tell me at once, who is 'Mr. Carter'?"

Tommy murmured a name in her ear.

"Oh!" said Tuppence, impressed.

"And I can tell you, old bean, he's IT!".

"Oh!" said Tuppence again. Then she added reflectively: "I like him, don't you? He looks so awfully tired and bored, and yet you feel that underneath he's just like steel, all keen and flashing. Oh!" She gave a skip. "Pinch me, Tommy, do pinch me. I can't believe it's real!"

Mr. Beresford obliged.

"Ow! That's enough! Yes, we're not dreaming. We've got a job!"

"And what a job! The joint venture has really begun. Let's have lunch—oh!"

The same thought sprang to the minds of each. Tommy voiced it first.

"Julius P. Hersheimmer!"

"We never told Mr. Carter about hearing from him."

"Well, there wasn't much to tell—not till we've seen him. Come on."

On inquiring for Mr. Hersheimmer they were at once taken up to his suite. An impatient voice cried "Come in" in answer to the page-boy's knock, and the lad stood aside to let them pass in.

Mr. Julius P. Hersheimmer was a good deal younger than either Tommy or Tuppence had pictured him. The girl put him down as thirty-five. He was of middle height, and squarely built to match his jaw. His face was pugnacious but pleasant. No one could have mistaken him for anything but an American, though he spoke with very little accent.

"Get my note? Sit down and tell me right away all you know about my cousin."

"Your cousin?"

"Sure thing. Jane Finn."

"Is she your cousin?"

"My father and her mother were brother and sister," explained Mr. Hersheimmer meticulously.

"Oh!" cried Tuppence. "Then you know where she is?"

"No!" Mr. Hersheimmer brought down his fist with a bang on the table. "I'm darned if I do! Don't you?"

"We advertised to receive information, not to give it," said Tuppence severely.

But Mr. Hersheimmer seemed to grow suddenly suspicious.

"See here," he declared. "This isn't Sicily! No demanding ransom or threatening to crop her ears if I refuse. These are the British Isles, so quit the funny business, or I'll just sing out for that beautiful big British policeman I see out there in Piccadilly."

Tommy hastened to explain.

"We haven't kidnaped your cousin. On the contrary, we're trying to find her. We're employed to do so."

Mr. Hersheimmer leant back in his chair.

"Put me wise," he said succinctly.

Tommy fell in with this demand in so far as he gave him a guarded version of the disappearance of Jane Finn, and of the possibility of her having been mixed up unawares in "some political show." He alluded to Tuppence and himself as "private inquiry agents" commissioned to find her, and added that they would therefore be glad of any details Mr. Hersheimmer could give them.

That gentleman nodded approval.

"I guess that's all right. I was just a mite hasty. Just trot out your questions and I'll answer."

For the moment this paralyzed the Young Adventurers, but Tuppence, recovering herself, plunged boldly into the breach with a reminiscence culled from detective fiction.

"When did you last see the dece— your cousin, I mean?"

"Never seen her," responded Mr. Hersheimmer.

"What?" demanded Tommy, astonished.

"No, sir. As I said before, my father and her mother were brother and sister, just as you might be"—Tommy did not correct this view of their relationship—"but they didn't always get on together. And when my aunt made up her mind to marry Amos Finn, who was a poor schoolteacher out west, my father was just mad! Said if he made his pile, as he seemed in a fair way to do, she'd never see a cent of it. Well, the upshot was that Aunt Jane went out west and we never heard from her again.

"The old man did pile it up. He went into oil, and he went into steel, and he played a bit with railroads, and I can tell you he made Wall Street sit up!" He paused. "Then he died—last fall—and I got the dollars. Well, would you believe it, my conscience got busy! Kept knocking me up and saying: What about your Aunt Jane, way out west? It worried me some. You see, I figured it out that Amos Finn would never make good. He wasn't that sort. End of it was, I hired a man to hunt her down. Result, she was dead, and Amos Finn was dead, but they'd left a daughter—Jane—who'd been torpedoed in the Lusitania on her way to Paris. She was saved all right, but they didn't seem able to hear of her over this side. I guessed they weren't hustling any, so I thought I'd come along over, and speed things up. I phoned Scotland Yard and the Admiralty first thing. The Admiralty rather choked me off, but Scotland Yard were very civil—said they would make inquiries, even sent a man round this morning to get her photograph. I'm off to Paris tomorrow, just to see what the Prefecture is doing. I guess if I go to and fro hustling them, they ought to get busy."

The energy of Mr. Hersheimmer was tremendous. They bowed before it.

"But say, now," he ended, "you're not after her for anything? Contempt of court, or something British? A proud-spirited young American girl might find your rules and regulations in war time rather irksome, and get up against it. If that's the case, and there's such a thing as graft in this country, I'll buy her off."

Tuppence reassured him.

"That's good. Then, we can work together. What about some lunch?"

Oysters had just given place to Sole Colbert when a card was brought to Hersheimmer.

"Inspector Japp, C. I. D. Scotland Yard again. Another man this time. What does he expect I can tell him that I didn't tell the first chap? I hope they haven't lost that photograph. That western photographer's place was burned down and all his negatives destroyed—this is the only copy in existence. I got it from the principal of the college there."

An unformulated dread swept over Tuppence.

"You—you don't know the name of the man who came this morning?"

"Yes, I do. No, I don't. Half a second. It was on his card. Oh, I know! Inspector Brown. Quiet, unassuming sort of chap."

A veil might with profit be drawn over the events of the next half-hour. Suffice it to say that no such person as "Inspector Brown" was known to Scotland Yard. The photograph of Jane Finn, which would have been of the utmost value to the police in tracing her, was lost beyond recovery. Once again "Mr. Brown" had triumphed.

The immediate result of this setback was to effect a rapprochement between Julius Hersheimmer and the Young Adventurers. All barriers went down with a crash, and Tommy and Tuppence felt they had known the young American all their lives. They abandoned the discreet reticence of "private inquiry agents," and revealed to him the whole history of the joint venture, whereat the young man declared himself "tickled to death."

"I've always had a kind of idea that English girls were just a mite moss-grown. Old-fashioned and sweet, you know, but scared to move around without a footman or a maiden aunt. I guess I'm a bit behind the times!"

The upshot of these confidential relations was that Tommy and Tuppence took up their abode forthwith at the Ritz, in order, as Tuppence put it, to keep in touch with Jane Finn's only living relation. "And put like that," she added confidentially to Tommy, "nobody could boggle at the expense!"

Nobody did, which was the great thing.

"And now," said the young lady on the morning after their installation, "to work! We should map out a plan of campaign."

"Hear, hear!"

"Well, let's do it. To begin with, what have we to go upon?"

"Absolutely nothing," said Tommy cheerily.

"Wrong!" Tuppence wagged an energetic finger. "We have two distinct clues."

"What are they?"

"First clue, we know one of the gang."

"Whittington?"

"Yes. I'd recognize him anywhere."

"Hum," said Tommy doubtfully, "I don't call that much of a clue. You don't know where to look for him, and it's about a thousand to one against your running against him by accident."

"I'm not so sure about that," replied Tuppence thoughtfully. "There are places in London where simply everyone is bound to turn up sooner or later. Piccadilly circus, for instance. One of my ideas was to take up my stand there every day."

"Honestly, I don't think much of the idea. Whittington mayn't be in London at all."

"That's true. Anyway, I think clue No. 2 is more promising."

"Let's hear it."

"It's nothing much. Only a Christian name—Rita. Whittington mentioned it that day."

"Are you proposing a third advertisement: Wanted, female crook, answering to the name of Rita?"

"I am not. I propose to reason in a logical manner. That man, Danvers, was shadowed on the way over, wasn't he? And it's more likely to have been a woman than a man—"

"I don't see that at all."

"I am absolutely certain that it would be a woman, and a good-looking one," replied Tuppence calmly. "Now, obviously, this woman, whoever she was, was saved."

"How do you make that out?"

"If she wasn't, how would they have known Jane Finn had got the papers?"

"Correct."

"Now, there's just a chance, I admit it's only a chance, that this woman may have been 'Rita.'"

"And if so?"

"If so, we've got to hunt through the survivors of the Lusitania till we find her."

"Then the first thing is to get a list of the survivors."

"I've got it. I wrote a long list of things I wanted to know, and sent it to Mr. Carter. I got his reply this morning, and among other things it incloses the official state ent of those saved from the Lusitania."

"But the great point is, is there a 'Rita' on the list?"

"That's just what I don't know," confessed Tuppence. "You see, very few Christian names are given. They're nearly all Mrs. or Miss."

Tommy nodded. "That complicates matters," he murmured thoughtfully.

"Well, we've just got to get down to it, that's all. We'll start with the London area. Just note down the addresses of any of the females who live in London or roundabout, while I put on my hat."

Five minutes later the young couple emerged into Piccadilly, and a few seconds later a taxi was bearing them to The Laurels, Glendower road, N.7, the residence of Mrs. Edgar Keith, whose name figured first in a list "of seven" reposing in Tommy's pocketbook.

The Laurels was a dilapidated house, standing back from the road with a few grimy bushes to support the fiction of a front garden. Tommy paid off the taxi, and accompanied Tuppence to the front doorbell. He pressed the bell. Tuppence withdrew to a suitable spot.

A slatternly-looking servant, with an extremely dirty face and a pair of eyes that did not match, answered the door.

Tommy had produced a notebook and pencil.

"Good morning," he said briskly and cheerfully. "From the Hampstead borough council. The new Voting Register. Mrs. Edgar Keith lives here, does she not?"

"Yes," said the servant.

"American, maybe?" asked Tommy, his pencil poised.

"Missus? Eleanor Jane."

"Eleanor," spelt Tommy. "Any sons or daughters over twenty-one?"

"Naow."

"Thank you." Tommy closed the notebook with a brisk snap. "Good morning."

"Good wheeze, wasn't it? And we can repeat it ad lib. Where's the next draw?"

"How Would They Have Known Jane Finn Had the Papers?"

"Mrs. Vandemeyer, 20 South Audley mansions. Miss Wheeler, 43 Clapington road, Battersea. She's a lady's maid, as far as I remember, so probably won't be there, and, anyway, she's not likely."

"Then the Mayfair lady is clearly indicated as the first port of call."

South Audley mansions was an imposing-looking block of flats just off Park lane. No. 20 was on the second floor.

Tommy had by this time the glibness born of practice. He rattled off the formula to the elderly woman, looking more like a housekeeper than a servant, who opened the door to him.

"Christian name?"

"Margaret."

Tommy spelt it, but the other interrupted him.

"No, g u e."

"Oh, Marguerite: French way, I see." He paused, then plunged boldly. "We had her down as Rita Vandemeyer, but I suppose that's incorrect?"

"She's mostly called that, sir, but Marguerite's her name."

"Thank you. That's all. Good morning."

Hardly able to contain his excitement, Tommy hurried down the stairs. Tuppence was waiting at the angle of the turn.

"You heard?"

"Yes. Oh, Tommy!"

Her hand was still in Tommy's. They had reached the entrance hall. There were footsteps on the stairs above them, and voices.

Suddenly, to Tommy's complete surprise, Tuppence dragged him into the little space by the side of the lift, where the shadow was deepest.

"What the—"

"Hush!"

Two men came down the stairs and passed out through the entrance. Tuppence's hand closed tighter on Tommy's arm.

"Quick—follow them. I daren't. He might recognize me. I don't know who the other man is, but the bigger of the two was Whittington."

Bryant.

The influence of Bryant upon the New England group that arose in the thirties was peculiar. His success as a poet and the chaste beauty of his nature lyrics stimulated nearly all of them to their first efforts, but his distinctive note was echoed by few of them. He led them undoubtedly to native themes, but he imparted to none his classic soul. . . .

He is a lone, cold peak on the horizon of our poetry, grand and solemn in the morning twilight of American song. He did but little, but that little is unlike anything else in the range of our literature. He is the poetic monument of our early Puritan origins, the mark upon the border-line between the old passing order and the new world that was to be.—Fred Lewis Pattee, in "Sidelights on American Literature."

Mary's Judgment.

Some men grow a beard to decorate their faces, others try to modify where they cannot decorate. In any case, the man is rash who removes his facial adornment after it has become familiar to his friends. One such man called upon his aunt after parting with his beard. The maid did not recognize him and plainly doubted his word, so he gave her his card as a warranty. His aunt received him with amusement. "You're sure you know me?" he asked. "Sure I didn't." "No," said the aunt, mirthfully. "She said there was a strange man, who looked like a gentleman, but he had one of your cards."

Drill Struck Underground River.

Southwest of Nanton near Willow creek in the foothills of the Rockies in Alberta while an oil company was boring for oil at one of its new test wells, the drill suddenly dropped fifty feet into an underground river with a current of such power as to bend the eight-inch steel drill as if made of lead, requiring three days to get it to the surface for repairs.

Africa's Rise.

Northeast of the tip of Pernambuco, in South Africa, the ocean beds open out somewhat. The northern portion of Africa has been strongly driven in here. In this place it has spread out until it is low, all except the Atlas mountains, which have crumpled where Africa was driven bodily against the mass of Spain. But in the south there could be no spreading because there was no direction to spread. The only way to go was up. So up Africa rose.

WERE GREAT RACE

Vikings Properly Take High Place in History.

Too Long Looked Upon as "Sea Rovers" and "Pirates"—Yankees of Their Age.

"Many persons pigeonhole the Vikings along with Captain Kidd and Blackbeard as nothing more than pirates," says a bulletin from the headquarters of the National Geographic society. "But this is no more nearly true than some of our other easy generalizations about people we do not know.

The Vikings had among them merchants, explorers, lawgivers and litterateurs, as well as guerrilla sea rovers. And if they must be branded a nation of robbers, it might as well be recognized that we are discussing family affairs, opening the closet to examine our own private skeletons, as it were. For under the name of Goth, Northman and Norman, they poured blood into and contributed traits to the people of almost every country of western and southern Europe.

Especially is British stock indebted to Viking blood. It came early from their kinsmen, the Angles and Saxons, it came through Viking colonies in Scotland and Ireland, it came directly by invasion in the time of Canute, and finally came the important contribution of the Normans, Vikings once removed.

The Vikings were distinctly products of their geographic environment. They may be considered Germans who were made over by the more northern winter and led to the sea by the fiords and islands of Scandinavia. Their boats became to them what horses are to the Cossack or camels to the desert dweller. The raids in which some of the young bloods engaged were not piracy under the morality of the day, which made one's enemies fair marks for plunder.

Americans should feel sympathetic toward the Vikings, for they were in many ways, both desirable and undesirable, the Yankees of their age. Restless and energetic, votaries of the strenuous life, lovers of adventure, they traveled for the love of travel and sought wealth, whether in merchant boats or war craft, for the love of the seeking. They loved their politics and enjoyed the debates of the Althing as fully as the fights in which their feasts often broke up. They were ardent outdoor-sports enthusiasts, engaged in skiing, snowshoeing and sledding in the winter, and staged wrestling, running and jumping matches in the warmer seasons. They even had their national ball game, a sort of hybrid between hockey and lacrosse.

A little imagination might serve to credit the Vikings with being a source of such modern devices as pure food laws, the carbon copies of our business world and ship subsidies. One old Viking law announces that it shall be fraud to sell "sand or shavings for meal or butter." Viking merchants checked their wares from or into their boats by notches on tally sticks, and then ingeniously furnished both buyers and sellers' records for their "files" by splitting the stick.

King Canute was the Viking champion of an especially appealing ship subsidy. He decreed that any merchant who made three voyages overseas at his own expense should be ennobled.

Height of Politeness.

The London bus driver has always been known for his ready humor, but the man on the rear platform has taken that honor now.

The staff instruction department of a certain company rubs in so much the desirability of politeness to passengers that perhaps this attitude is responsible for the remark of a conductor as he stood on the top deck at a stopping place, and thus addressed the crowd of would-be passengers:

"Will the ladies and gentlemen who are unable to obtain accommodation in the interior of the vehicle kindly ascend to the superstructure? Eh? What?"

Signal Worth While.

An exceptionally conspicuous automobile stop signal has been designed recently, says Popular Mechanics magazine. It is mounted in front of the regular tail light, and is composed of a large, flat, circular frame with its center below the light and a semi-circular opening in front of it. Inside this is mounted a rotating disk, which in its normal position has its [illegible] glazed opening directly in [illegible] tail light. The disk is [illegible] a cable to either the brake pedal or the emergency brake lever, and the application of the brake rotates the disk, exposing its lower half, on which is the word "Stop" in letters of red glass set in an opaque background.

No Lawyers Needed.

Up till quite recently the inhabitants of Juan Fernandez island, the scene of Robinson Crusoe's adventures, got along without any laws and agreed among themselves as to what was to their best interest.

Captain McCann, who recently returned from a visit to the island which Defoe made famous, describes the present-day inhabitants of Cumberland bay, where Robinson Crusoe and his man Friday spent four years. What was once a dreary, desolate spot has been transformed into a thriving community, says Captain McCann in the Mentor.

RECIPE FOR COTTAGE CHEESE PIE

Try Some Cottage Cheese Pie.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Blend one tablespoonful of cornstarch gradually with two-thirds cupful of sugar, one cupful of cottage cheese, two beaten egg yolks, one tablespoonful butter or melted fat, one-eighth teaspoonful salt, one-fourth teaspoonful vanilla. Bake in a pie shell that has been prebaked for ten minutes or until it begins to color slightly. It must not be brown, or the finished pie will be dark and unpalatable. Bake in a moderately cool oven. When set, cool slightly and cover with a meringue made by adding two tablespoonfuls of sugar to the beaten white of two eggs; one-half teaspoonful of vanilla may be added. Brown the meringue in a slow oven.

PEANUT MEAL QUITE USEFUL

Mixed With Starchy Flours It Makes Very Palatable Cakes, Gems and Hot Breads.

When the blanched kernels of peanuts from which the shells have been removed are used in making oil, the press cake can be ground into meal and used with wheat, corn and similar starchy flours to make very palatable and nutritious cakes, gems and hot breads, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

Handicapped.

A New York friend of mine returned from his golfing the other day. "Have a good game?" he was asked. "Rotten!" he replied. "What was the trouble?" "Oh, it was all my caddy's fault. He had the hiccups. Every time he hiccupped, I'd miss my stroke; and every time he didn't hiccup, I'd miss it just because I was waiting for the hiccup to come!"—Christian Work.

Know Him First.

Our days of courtship were short and I had met few of my husband's relatives before we were married.

Jane is fond of her uncle Fred and had not seen him for several months when he came home to visit, and I said: "You don't know this man, dear, do you?"

Jane readily answered: "That's my uncle. I knowed him fore you did."—Exchange.

Natural Question.

Two recent arrivals in a small country town entered a druggist's shop to buy some distemper for coloring a wall in their new residence.

A nervous-looking assistant came forward.

In reply to the question: "Do you keep distemper?" he stammered: "Is it, is it for dogs?"

JELLY ON PANTRY SHELVES

Housewives Last Year Either Sold or Put Away 1,335,000 Containers—Also Fruit.

Farm housewives last year either sold or put on their pantry shelves 1,335,000 containers of jelly, 9,500,000 cans of fruit and vegetables, and 715,000 pounds of poultry and meat, canned according to methods demonstrated to them by extension agents of the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agricultural colleges.

Would Make a Difference.

The patient waited with breathless anxiety as the doctor diagnosed his case.

"I would suggest, Biddle, that you go over to the Marblehead and live for a while," said the physician finally.

"Why, doctor," returned the patient fretfully, "the food at the Marblehead isn't any better than at the Franklin! Why should I change?"

"The food may not be any better, but the Marblehead is run on the European plan, and you have to pay for what you eat there, sir," announced the doctor.

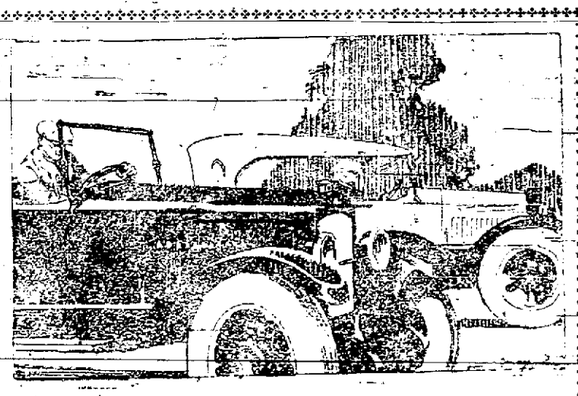
Rich Mines in the Philippines.

Diamond drilling has proved there are at least 3,000,000 tons of semi-anthracite besides large deposits of sub-bituminous coal in the Philippine islands, Dr. Warren D. Smith, head geologist of the University of Oregon and authority on the mineral wealth of our antipodal possession, declared recently.

The islands also possess the largest gold mine in the Far East, which has turned out $1,000,000 worth of the precious metal in one year, he said. Petroleum, iron, silver, sulphur and asbestos are also found.

Client Worth Having.

The lawyer had been reading for an hour or so and the insurance agent who rented desk room ventured an inquiry as to what the volume might be about. "Just a life of Henry VIII." "I see little to admire in the life of that individual," remarked the other, with a snort. "You are doubtless right," the lawyer replied. "But I would have liked to have had his divorce business just the same."



Water and oil do mix

Did you know that your automobile engine produces over a gallon of water for every gallon of gasoline consumed?

Most of the water is blown out of your exhaust but a part condenses and works into your crankcase.

If your lubricating oil possesses emulsifying qualities, this water will cause no damage.

Most oils do not possess this quality. The water is carried into bearings and cylinders with oftentimes very expensive results.

Sunoco Motor Oil possesses the remarkable ability to absorb (emulsify) water. It protects your motor and renders harmless the dangerous moisture which is always present.

SUNOCO

NO BONUS FOR ABLE VETERANS

Campaign Launched by Anti-Bonus League Against Bonus Bill.

The Former Service Men's Anti-Bonus League has announced the election of a national commander and the launching of a determined campaign to prevent the passage of a bill granting a bonus to able bodied veterans at the forthcoming session of Congress.

Major Richard S. Buck, a well known engineer, who had a distinguished career overseas, was elected national director. Other officers elected were: Treasurer, Colonel Benjamin F. Castle, New York; executive secretary, Sergeant Edward L. Allen; national secretary, Private Carl Conroy.

The league, which has national headquarters at 19 West 44th street, New York city, had its inception with non-commissioned officers and enlisted men who saw service during the World War. Organization of State divisions is now proceeding in 15 States, and as rapidly as possible additional divisions will be organized until there is one in every State. Control of the league is vested in a national council of which 31 former officers, non-commissioned officers and privates are members. The personnel of the council will be increased as additional States are organized.

Associated with Major Buck as an advisory board which will advise with the national council on methods of procedure, are a number of nationally known men, all of whom saw service overseas with the American Expeditionary Forces. They include General Henry L. Stimson, former secretary of war under President Taft; General William Barclay Parsons, who commanded the famous 11th Engineers overseas; General Avery D. Andrews, who is chairman of the advisory board; Lieutenant Colonel Francis H. Robbins, Jr., Lieutenant Colonel Newbold Morris, Lieutenant Colonel L. Simon Plaut, Major Brokaw Compton, Major William H. Keble and Major Bourinot Keith.

Major Buck, the newly elected national director, served with the 11th Engineers under General Parsons. As staff officer he participated in transporting to the front the tanks used by General Byng in his famous drive at Cambrai. It was Major Buck's battalion of engineers that fought the German counter-attack at Cambrai with picks and shovels. As a result of his part in this action and for other services he was awarded the Distinguished Service Order by the British government.

In announcing the campaign by the league to prevent the passage of a bonus measure for the able bodied at the forthcoming session of Congress, Major Buck has issued the following statement:

"The Former Service Men's Anti-Bonus League, which is comprised largely of non-commissioned officers and privates who fought in the World War, is actively organizing in 15 States and will immediately extend its activities into the other States of the nation. The members of the league are convinced that a bonus measure for the able bodied at this time or at any other time is fundamentally opposed to the principles of Democracy.

"There is no excuse other than that of political expediency to justify a demand for a bonus to repay men who were privileged to serve their country in a great moral crisis. When the bonus was first demanded, the demand was made on the ground that World War veterans faced actual hardship through unemployment due to their war service. That claim can no longer be put forward. The prosperity of the country today provides work at ample wages for all able bodied men and this prosperity would be seriously jeopardized if any organized minority were permitted to force an added burden of taxation on the public in order to achieve political advantages.

"Our canvass of the sentiment of able bodied veterans convinces us that the majority of them do not desire a bonus for themselves. What they do desire and insist upon is unceasing generosity to the wounded and disabled and that is in conformity with the aims of the league. Its slogan is: 'For the disabled—everything; for the able bodied—nothing.' We believe that the masses of able bodied veterans support us in this attitude and will demonstrate that fact when the bonus measure is again before Congress."

CHAMPAGNE NETS MILLION.

Alleged to Have Been Shipped From Hammondsport Winery Co.

Several indictments in the celebrated Hammondsport Winery case, in which several prominent New Yorkmen have already been indicted, are expected as the result of testimony given early last week before the federal grand jury at Buffalo.

Several weeks ago investigations by Ganson Depew, jr., assistant federal attorney and the department of justice led to the indictment of eight prominent New York business men and two residents of Bath, N. Y., on charges of conspiracy to violate the prohibition law. Two of the men, Matthew Black and James P. Gross, of New York, were arrested and admitted to bail. The others have not yet been apprehended by the U. S. marshall.

These eight men, it is alleged, as part of a national bootlegging scheme purchased the Hammondsport Winery Co. for the purpose of manufacturing fake champagne on a large scale. For more than 18 months the government alleges, the violations went on, during which time thousands of gallons of fake champagne were shipped from the plant in glass-lined tank cars, built for the purpose. Later, the liquor was shipped in large crates—three to a flat car—labelled ice machinery.

An audit of the books of the alleged wholesale bootchery, the government alleged, revealed the fact that nearly $1,000,000 profit had been made by the concern before its activities came to light.

STUDENTS OF IMMATURE MIND.

Survey, However, Shows Delinquents Have Average Intelligence.

Too little sleep, too much play, not enough study, too much leisure; fast eating and diversified thinking are factors that devitalize students and are responsible for the "delinquent groups" found in every university, according to a report by Prof. Delton Thomas Howard, of Northwestern University.

In Northwestern alone, out of 1635 students in the college of liberal arts, Prof. Howard has found a "delinquent group" of 2[illegible] composed of 166 men and 99 women. In other words, sixteen out of every one hundred students do not "pass." But delinquency does not necessarily imply lack of intelligence, the professor found.

"No result of our study," he writes, "is more significant and interesting than the discovery that the average intelligence of the so-called delinquent group is quite as high as that of the general student body."

Students found to be delinquent are put on probation at Northwestern and have to make good or be dropped.

"The probationers," the investigator reports, "devote more time, as a whole, by their own confessions, to athletics, social activities, outside work and leisure; less time to sleep, campus activities, meals, classes and studies."

Among the total of men interviewed fifteen were thought to be handicapped by "mental immaturity." Commenting on this Professor Howard remarks:

"These were boys who have been reared under easy circumstances and who have never been required to view life seriously. Such students have a distinctly childish attitude, no intellectual interests, no definite ambitions and no sense of responsibility."

GOOD NEWS

Many Wellsboro Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby.

"Good news travels fast," and the many bad sufferers in Wellsboro are glad to learn where relief may be found. Many a lame, weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills. Our citizens are telling the good news of their experience with this tested remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

Mrs. Walter F. Dewey, 11 East Ave., Wellsboro, says: "My kidneys caused me to suffer a lot with backaches. There was a steady, dull ache across the small of my back that kept me miserable. When I swept, my back gave out. I was subject to headaches and my kidneys acted irregularly. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Kentch's Drug Store, and they soon removed the backaches and put my kidneys in good order."

MILLIONS WASTED IN STALE BREAD

Food Research Institute Puts Loss Each Year at From Five to Ten Millions.

New York.—Waste in stale bread costs the bakers and consumers of the country from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 each year, according to the Food Research Institute, which has just completed a study of the problem, says the New York Times. As a means of reducing this loss, non-acceptance of return loaves, either through new laws, or action on the part of bakers, more efficient deliveries and better quality of output, are suggested by the institute. The principal source of loss is the return of bread to the bakers after it has become unsalable. The institute quotes the United States food administration as estimating that in 1917 the loss from the return of stale bread amounted to "upward of 600,000 barrels" of flour a year.

The loss varies greatly in different bakeries in the same city, and at various times. Replies to questionnaires sent out by the institute indicated a very low average on the Pacific coast and a relatively high percentage in the northeastern states.

The Food Research Institute was established at Stanford university in 1921, at the suggestion of Herbert Hoover, by the joint action of the university and the Carnegie corporation, for the study of problems in the production, distribution and consumption of food. It is concentrating its efforts for the present on problems related to wheat and wheat products, and it was as a part of this work that it studied certain economic phases of the baking industry.

Losses From Stale Bread.

"Losses from stale bread constitute an important item of cost for large numbers of wholesale bakers, and to some extent for retail bakers as well," says a summary of the survey. "Large stale bread losses tend to raise the price of bread to consumers and to threaten the financial position of the baker. Moreover, since stale bread is largely used for animal feed, or even for fuel, whenever considerable volume must be disposed of the loss occasions a needless waste of food.

"Our study leads to the conclusion that, under proper conditions, stale bread losses exceeding 1 per cent of production are excessive, and that a figure of one-half of 1 per cent is an attainable standard. Losses above 1 per cent reflect objectionable trade practices, poor business management or both.

"Acceptance of returns of unsold bread from dealers is by all odds the leading factor in such losses wherever the loss is high. Where this practice prevails the loss is almost sure to be excessive. The abandonment of the common practice of taking back unsold bread from dealers is essential to the solution of the stale-bread problem. This change of policy would reduce certain dangers of food contamination as well as tend to cut down waste. The success of a no-returns policy, however, requires careful attention to other measures calculated to insure that bread reaches the consumer fresh.

Needed in Sale of Bread.

"The principal requirements are the following: Bread of a high-keeping quality must be baked, so that bread a day or two old may be readily salable as fresh. Reasonable effort must be made to keep down the time between the baking of bread and its purchase by consumers. Dealers' requirements must be gauged closely from day to day, with salesmen's orders as a basis, but with adequate use of weather forecasts and other information concerning coming events that affect bread sales. Production must be adjusted carefully to requirements, both in amount and in time. Bakers must cultivate the support of dealers and their own sales force in securing this adjustment. Experience in the trade shows clearly that these measures are entirely practical.

"If they can meet these requirements, individual bakers can successfully enforce a no-returns policy, even when competing bakers take back unsold bread. Competition, however, makes it difficult for concerns to adopt and enforce this policy single-handed. Local agreements among leading wholesalers not to exchange unsold bread often afford a practicable method of abolishing this objectionable practice. Such agreements are in the public interest, but they are not easily adopted, cannot always be enforced, and tend to break down.

"State laws prohibiting returns of unsold bread have recently been adopted in six states. Their constitutionality is sometimes called in question, but has not yet been tested. Although not yet fully observed, they have clearly facilitated reduction in stale bread losses."

The Only Difficulty.

Edwin Lefevre, the Wall Street expert, said at a roof garden dinner in Philadelphia:

"Now that wireless broadcasting is such a fad, there are innumerable companies selling wireless stock.

"A wireless stock salesman called on a country minister the other day.

"'Doctor Steenthly,' he said, 'I'll sell you a million shares of our stock for half a dollar. In six weeks the shares will be quoted at 95 cents. Think of it! You'll be a rich man.'

"'But,' said Doctor Steenthly, in his cautious way, 'why don't you hold onto the shares and become a rich man yourself?'

"'I would,' said the salesman, 'only, you see, I need a shave—and how would I look if I waited six weeks?'"

Bees Brought Into Court.

An Akron man is suing for an injunction to restrain his neighbor's bees from stinging plaintiff, his tenants, guests or "help." Also he asks $500 damages for last season's bee stinging activities. Plaintiff, says Capper's Weekly, alleges his neighbor keeps thirty hives, and whenever plaintiff ventures out to hoe his garden or gather asparagus, the insects come over and play with him, and always they are so rough that he is driven indoors and his garden is neglected. He figures he lost $200 that way last year. It will be interesting to see if the bees will obey the law better than man.

Youngster's Wit.

One of the big busses which takes crippled school children to and from school was waiting with its load of little ones beside a street car which was taking on passengers. Among those getting on was a woman who had difficulty in mounting the step. Her arms were weighed down with parcels. The while she looked about her, puzzled as to how the feat was to be accomplished, one of the crippled boys in the motor bus, called to a man who had about made up his mind to help the woman on the car: "That's right, mister, help her on; it's hard for old ladies to climb." Detroit News.

British Women on Railroads.

Nearly 80,000 women are employed by the railways of the United Kingdom. Of this total the majority, of course, are employed in clerical work. A considerable number, however, are engaged in work not usually done by women. Nearly 100 are employed as laborers and a thousand more are classed as "mechanics and artisans." There are women signalmen, stationmasters, foremen, policemen, engine cleaners, oilers and greasers, and at least one who is engaged in the dangerous and arduous work of a switchman.

Australia Subsidizes Cotton.

Sydney, N. S. W.—The New South Wales government is offering cotton growers a three-year guaranty on delivery of cotton to ginneries, the first year 5½d a pound, the second year 4¾d and the third year 4d. In Queensland 100,000 acres of cotton are under cultivation.

Asks $30,000 for a Bite.

New York.—Alleging that a "cannibalistic" parrot bit a finger from her right hand, Hilma Guranson, a maid, has filed suit for $30,000 damages in New York city. The maid is suing her employer, Mrs. Julia Lecluse, owner of the parrot.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 9, 1923.

German marks were quoted in the New York market on Monday at 53 cents a million, or 1,886,792 to the American dollar.

Tolls paid by ships passing through the Panama Canal amounted to $2,124,429 during July. It was the first month in which the two million dollar mark was reached. Four hundred and eighty-three vessels used the waterway.

Eight persons were killed and two fatally injured late Sunday afternoon when a train crashed into an automobile truck carrying a picnic party in Niagara Falls. Mrs. Camille Capriotte and her five little children were killed. Angelo Bartollo, 35 years of age, and a baby were also killed. The husband of the dead woman and another man were fatally hurt.

Senator Albert B. Cummins, President pro tem of the Senate, advocating a federal amendment limiting future Presidents to one term, is quoted as saying: "Of course President Harding would have been renominated had he lived," Senator Cummins said, "but I always have believed that one term is enough. The great responsibilities and the tremendous strain of the office are more than any man can stand. The President of the United States is required to exert himself almost beyond the bounds of human limitations. His cares and worries break him down. Human frailties are too great to stand the strain which the presidency places on a man. We should limit the President to one term. It might be made a six year term, but I am not even so sure about that."

The Republican organization in the senate will lose a vote during the senate in the next congress through the death of President Harding, a vote which many of the party leaders thought might be necessary to save the control of that party over matters of legislation. Now that the office of vice-president is no longer filled it will be necessary for the senate to select from its own membership a presiding officer, who as a senator would cast his vote on roll calls. While the vice president as presiding officer never participated in debate he was required by the constitution to break any tie votes which might develop. With the Republican majority in the senate reduced almost to the vanishing point, and with threatened new alignments of Republican senators the importance of the vice president's vote took on new proportions.

The writers of history may not include President Harding in the list of really great leaders, with Lincoln, Garfield, McKinley, Roosevelt and the like, but they must in all justice accord to him an infinite patience and kindness in dealing with public questions and men, which enabled him to handle the problems of government without the stress and worry which had handicapped many of his predecesors.

We think of his steadfast courage in adhering to the right as it was given to him to see the right, his quiet modesty, his unfailing charity, his unostentatious but clear-sighted judgment in dealing with the vast complicated issues left us by the calamity of the war, and his skill and success in assembling the epoch-making conference at Washington, when the first step was taken to check the mad rush of armaments and to demonstrate that the real security of any nation is the friendship of the world, won by patient and constructive good will. His memory is revered by millions and the heartfelt sympathy of those millions go out to the sorrowing widow in this hour of her great bereavement.

A PROCLAMATION.

Governor Pinchot has called upon the people of Pennsylvania to observe tomorrow, August 10, as a day of mourning in memory of President Harding. His proclamation is as follows:

"As a due and fitting tribute to Warren Gamaliel Harding, late President of the United States, whose sudden and untimely death has brought deep sorrow to the people of this nation, and of the world, and in accordance with the proclamation of the president of the United States, I, Gifford Pinchot, governor of the commanwealth of Pennsylvania, do appoint Friday, August tenth, the day upon which the body of the late president will be laid at rest, as a day of religious observance of mourning tribute of the State.

'I recommend that the people of Pennsylvania do on that day suspend the pursuit of their several avocations and assemble in their respective places of worship, there to render their full measure of reverence and love to the president, whose death has brought such deep grief upon our nation. And I recommend further that at the moment of high noon upon that day all activity of every sort shall cease throughout the commonwealth, so that in silence and quietness our people may pause to remember with gratitude one who gave his life in the service of his country."

—Mr. and Mrs. John Delos Sanders, of Elmira, were drowned on the evening of July 31 in Waneta Lake when the steel boat in which they were riding suddenly collapsed.

OUR NEW PRESIDENT.

A Gifted Exponent of Highest Type of Americanism.

Calvin Coolidge, thirtieth President of the United States, was born in the village of Plymouth, Vt., on July 4, 1872, of Puritan ancestors, who came to this country and settled at Watertown, Mass., in 1630.

He left the farm in 1891 for Amherst College and graduated with honors in 1895. Immediately upon leaving college he went to Northampton to study law and finally settled there.

By hard work and steady progress Mr. Coolidge continued his rise until he could be considered for high state office and then it was that leaders exerted their powers to have him nominated for the lieutenant governorship. He was elected in the first campaign won by the Republicans in Massachusetts for several years, due to the Progressive party split. Thereafter it was but logical for him to succeed to the governorship, an office which he held for two terms and which he left for the vice presidency.

The dramatic events of the Boston police strike, in which the governor took a firm and unyielding stand for law and order, focussed upon him in 1919 national attention and made of him almost overnight a national figure. For a while he was talked of prominently as a presidential possibility.

As vice president he became a regular attendant at the President's cabinet meetings, a custom established for the first time in his case.

Mr. Coolidge married Miss Grace Goodhue, whom he first met in Northampton as a teacher, in 1905, and they have two sons.

Mr. Coolidge is depicted by many of his contemporary biographers as a brilliant gifted exponent of the highest type of New England bred Americanism. Among his party associates he is regarded as stalwart in his patriotism, courageous and uncompromising in the performance of duty, conservative though by no means unprogressive, in his convictions.

Narrow Escape of Two Men.

Fred Bailey, of Williamsport, and A. F. Rollings, of Philadelphia, had a miraculous escape from serious injuries last Friday on the highway near Austin when the Liberty touring car in which they were riding went over a 50 foot embankment.

It is reported that the steering gear became locked and the car got too near the edge of the road, causing the edge of the bank to give way. The automobile turned completely over three times in its descent, and on the third turn threw Mr. Bailey twenty feet clear of the car. Rollings was pinned under the car. He was rushed to Austin where Dr. Page took six stitches in his mouth and jaw. He was also bruised and slightly cut, while Bailey was bruised and cut, but neither was hurt seriously.

—Score another for the Susquehanna trail. A daily truck service from Wellsboro to Williamsport and return has been established, not possible before. Tioga and Lycoming were mostly strangers. Now two hours over one of the finest pieces of improved roads in the east, thanks to Sproul, Sadler and Uhler, makes us near neighbors, as we should, to our business and community advantage. Highway Commissioner Wright and Chief Engineer Connell, of Harrisburg, made a hurried trip over North Tier Roads recently. They spent the night in Conderaport and drove to Wellsboro via of Galeton. Many are glad they had "the privilege" of driving that road from Galeton to Wellsboro through Gaines and Ansonia, which must have conveyed to their anatomies the best possible argument for the completion of the east and west North Tier highway. At Wellsboro they struck the feeder of the trail and went through Williamsport over one of the most historical and smoothest pieces of constructed highways in the east, always an object lesson of how primary arteries should be built. The comparison must have been easy to make. So hard was their schedule that they did not even visit the district engineer's office in Wellsboro. But they rode the roads just the same, which is the main thing. It is hoped they noticed how easily the burnt-cork topped roads wore to the bone and how the concrete stands up. If so, it was worth the trip, no matter what it costs.—North American.

BIG BOOTLEGGER CAUGHT.

Williamsport Man Arrested, Bringing in Whisky From Jersey Coast.

Max Rosenthal, of Williamsport, and Max Jacobs, of Wilkesbarre, were arrested by State Police on the Montgomery pike last Sunday on a charge of transporting intoxicating liquor, a search of the big Cadillac sedan in which they were traveling bringing to light 156 quarts of genuine whisky which is is alleged they were bringing into Williamsport. Rosenthal is regarded by Williamsport officials as the king of bootleggers in that vicinity and they have kept him under surveillance for some time, but owing to his exceptional resourcefulness in covering his tracks he has, up to this time, escaped arrest. Both men were held under $2,500 bail for their appearance at court.

The liquor found in the coupe is said to be of very high grade and only landed on the Jersey coast early Saturday morning whence it was brought to Williamsport, presumably to supply the home trade. It is now reposing in the recently installed burglar proof booze vault in the city hall basement.

Little Progress on Presho Road.

The four mile stretch of concrete remaining to be finished between Lindley and Presho, now under construction by Horn & Devlin, of Galeton, if not completed this fall will be the only "missing link" of improved highway between Washington and Buffalo. This piece with the short stretch between Liverpool and Selinsgrove, which will be completed the present month, have made necessary the only two detours on the entire trip.

Corning people are alive to the disadvantage worked to them by reason of the Presho detour and are appealing to the contractors and the highway department in an endeavour to have the work speeded up.

Completion of the road, the Corning business men feel, would naturally bring to that city people from Tioga county who are now going to Williamsport over the Trail route.

Methodist Episcopal Church.

There will be a Union Memorial Service in honor of the late President Harding at twelve o'clock, sharp, tomorrow. The service will last only half an hour.

Mid-Week Meeting this evening. Morning Worship at 10:30 followed by Sunday School at 11:40. Let us do our part to maintain attendance and interest in these services in midsummer.

Evening Worship will be as usual on the Green with address by the Methodist Episcopal minister. This will be the last of the services on the Green.

The Woman's Missionary Societies will meet next Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. George Derby

Free Mission, Queen Street.

Preaching Services every Sabbath morning 10:30; and evening, 7:30. Class and Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7:30. All are cordially invited to worship with us.

FARMER WANTED.

Competent farmer wanted at once. Must be experienced in dairy farming. Man with family preferred.

Dr. JOHN W. EATON.
Wellsboro, Pa.

VACCINATION DEPUTIES NAMED

To Revaccinate Children Where Two Previous Operations Failed.

Dr. C. W. Sheldon, County Medical Director, has been notified by the State Secretary of Health, Dr. Chas. H. Miner, that the following County physicians have been appointed as official Deputies to revaccinate free of charge, school children who have undergone two or more unsuccessful attempts at vaccination against smallpox. The appointees are:

School children living in the rural districts who have been twice unsuccessfully vaccinated, or those who had been admitted to school last term on an official temporary certificate must be revaccinated by the County Medical Director, or one of these official Deputies, who will grant the temporary certificate which will admit them to school for the current school year. In cities, boroughs, or townships of the first class having organized Boards of Health, this official revaccination must be performed by the Board of Health Physician

Teachers or school Principals are not allowed to admit children to school unless they present, or have already filed a certificate of successful vaccination, or in the case of unsuccessful results, the official temporary certificate, which must have been issued since June 1st, at which time temporary certificates issued during the previous school term became void.

The County Medical Director has pointed out the fact that school teachers must be careful in demanding proper vaccination certificates. A certificate stating that a child has been vaccinated is not sufficient. The vaccination Physician must certify that an examination of the child made not less than eight days after vaccination disclosed a vaccination scar, or cicatrix indicating a successful vaccination. If this vaccination cicatrix is not in evidence, the Physician cannot legally certify, and the child must be revaccinated.

The Supreme Court in Lee vs March 203 Pennsylvania, Page 351, has ruled that it is obligatory to use the vaccination certificate forms prescribed by the State Department of Health. These forms are furnished free of charge to all Physicians practicing in the second class Townships, and any other form cannot legally be accepted by the teacher or Principal.

Citing the law, it is also explained that teachers may not accept certificates issued by the family Physician or School Medical Inspectors exempting pupils from vaccination because of an alleged physical disability. Cases of actual physical disability for vaccination are rare. Generally speaking, any child that is well enough to go to school is a fit subject for vaccination. If physical disability is claimed, such cases must be passed upon by the County Medical Director or one of the officials above named.

School Medical Inspectors are directed by the Secretary of Health to verify the existence of the required vaccination cicatrix and pass upon the validity of vaccination certificates filed.

—We are requested to announce that the Department of Forestry has accepted the resignation of Warden M. Lawrence Churchill, of Union township, and that Mr. Churchill is no longer connected with the department.

His College Expenses Will Be Paid By a Trust Company

Some eight years ago a certain business man died, his wife and young son surviving.

Next fall the son will enter college. His tuition and expenses will be paid by a trust company.

The money which makes a college education a possibility for this young man was thoughtfully set aside for this purpose in the father's will. The trust company safeguarded the fund in the intervening years, and it will now pay it out as needed, without allowing for extravagance, as directed in the will.

Your son will do things for himself. But you do not wish your absence to mean loss of certain advantages in his youth. You can at least assure his education through a trust arrangement. Let us tell you how we can serve you in this matter.

"Any Old Port in a Storm"

By A. W. PEACH

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Stafford gazed around the room with a whimsical grin. It was a top-floor, skylight room. The bed groaned and the whole room gave evidence that it was a last shelter. He looked up through the sky-light. "Anyway, I am getting nearer the angels all the time," he advised himself.

He arranged a few belongings that he took from his pocket and placed them on the small, battered bureau. As he did this, he noticed in the top drawer some torn pieces of paper.

"Somebody's last will and testament," he muttered to himself. "I wonder what poor soul came to anchor in this last harbor."

He arranged the pieces until the story was plain to him and he whistled softly as he worked. Three attempts had been made to write a letter to some one called "Dear." Each had been thrown aside; the third and complete one evidently because of a blot. The last he could read. It began: Dear—I am all discouraged. My hospital bill took all my savings. I'm so weak . . . (Here the note was illegible) . . . Come to me. Just for the old love you had for me. Cheer me a little; you are the only one who can. If you don't, I'm afraid it is the end. . . ."

Stafford stared at the trembling girlish hand, his smile vanishing, and read on. She asked her one-time lover to meet her in the city station. She would be in one of the first three seats—if there was room.

The German of whom he had just hired the room had told him that the roomer had just left, and Stafford reasoned that in her condition she would leave for one purpose—the one indicated in her note.

He drew his last half-dollar from his pocket and inspected the coin. "How can I rescue a maiden in distress with this?" he asked himself—and did not pause to reply.

In a few minutes he was heading for the great central station, breasting the cold winds that hummed by every worn thread of his old suit. Patient trudging soon brought him insight of the huge pile, and a minute later found him studying the long central seats. His quick eye saw a slight form, then a thin, wistful face, from which abnormally dark and sad eyes looked out with inner dread. In the girl's hand was a yellow slip of paper.

He went up to her with decisive stride. "Miss Hope Hartwell? My name is Lane Stafford. Has the knight arrived?" He held out her blotted note.

She stared at him; then at the note; then at him. What she saw eased the tension in her face—probably the inner light of good cheer and frank manhood in his eyes; little lights that would burn while life lasted.

She held out the yellow slip. "He sent a messenger. He isn't coming," she said quietly.

"That suits me," he said cheerfully. "That is my last half dollar. Let's spend it like millionaires. It's lunch time, you know. I know a warm and cozy place where for four bits, you can get—" He elaborated on the menu.

The girl looked at him wonderingly; and he became sober. He did not intend that this dark-eyed bit of city wreckage should drift from his life. "Remember, it's any old port in a storm," he announced. "And we both better get in."

His air was infectious. She rose and started with him, worrying him as she did so with her revealed weakness.

They feasted to the full extent of the half dollar. He exerted himself to amuse her, and was satisfied with the shy amusement in her eyes. After the feast he announced:

"Now, let us set sail for 'Sauerkraut's' abode, where you shall have my room—"

"But—"

"But—you shall! Come, lass, the tide has been ebbing, but it's coming in, believe—me!"

It was evident she had never met a specimen like him—one of the cheery souls that life seems never able to overcome; and he guessed, too, that she knew her need of him.

"Old "Sauerkraut," long ago hardened to the ways of the strange world that drifted in and out of his cheap place, nodded briefly when he heard the arrangement. He had his week's rent—why worry?

Pledging her not to run away, he waved her a gay adieu and headed out into the night to become one of the sleepers in a long hall where by virtue of a bath and evident poverty a man might sleep for one night only. He planned and then he slept, dreamlessly.

The next day he hunted for work, but his crippled right hand barred him from several chances. He managed to get enough change together to give himself and Hope two fair meals on two days. At the close of the last she looked at him with eyes that were still amused and more—tender with a soft glow in their dark depths.

"How do you keep so cheerful?" she asked.

"Easy, I don't know, unless—nobody can get my goat—not even life!"

The evening of the third day he hurried her to their alley restaurant. His eyes were sparkling. "Listen, my lady, I broke into an office today and found I had hit the father of one of my buddies overseas who went West—and he told me he could give me some work about his place in Florida—take charge of his estate, but I ought to be a married man. I told him I was."

Her cry was faint and breathless. "You—you are!"

"No, I'm not. I was thinking of the future. I am going to be. I'm going to marry you!"

"You—you—" she drew back with her thoughts unspoken.

He misunderstood. "That is if you can stand a chap with a crippled hand around all—"

She caught the crippled hand, suddenly bent her dark head and he felt her cheek wet upon the broken hand that was his memory of the Argonne. Then he bent unconscious of the world about him and kissed the nape of her neck.

"Down goes the anchor, honey; let the winds blow. We've reached port!" he announced.

"SPEECH" THAT ALL ENJOYED

At That, There Are Banquet Orators Who Might Adopt the Methods Employed by "Russ."

The annual banquet of the Horse Shoe club was held in New York the other day with Russ B.— slated as speaker of the evening.

The toastmaster praised the president, the secretary, the sergeant-at-arms, and all the members individually and collectively. When he had finished most of the flasks were lying on their faces with a goodly number of the brotherhood attempting to emulate them.

A negro string orchestra, stirred from a similar source, rose to the magnitude of Sousa's band. Some one discovered a piano and essayed competition. Surviving members of the order attempted to talk about all this, and in the midst of it Russ was called upon to deliver his address.

Fifteen minutes later he was still nodding, scraping and gesticulating in a manner calculated to shame the shade of Patrick Henry. With a final flourishing bow he took his seat.

All present and conscious burst into wild applause. Some pounded glasses on the board. Others stamped the floor. Pandemonium seized and swayed the entire gathering. All arose in a triple locomotive for "ole Russ, the greatest li'l orator on earth."

That worthy nodded his appreciation and smiled wanly at the tribute. During the quarter hour of gasticulating he had not spoken a work.—Kansas City Star.

The Indian and His Tamed Snake.

An Indian had tamed a blacksnake, which he kept about him during the summer months. In autumn he let the creature go whither it chose to crawl, but told it to come to him again upon a certain day, which he named, in the spring. A white man who was present, and saw what was to be done, and heard the Indian affirm that the serpent would return to him the very day he had appointed, had no faith in the truth of his prediction. The next spring, retaining the day in his memory, curiosity led him to the place where he found the Indian in waiting; and, after remaining with him about two hours, the serpent came crawling back, and put himself under the care of his old master.

In this case, the Indian had probably observed that blacksnakes usually return to their old haunts at the same vernal season; and as he had tamed, fed and kept this snake in a particular place, experience taught him that it would return on a certain day.

The Way of Golf.

He enjoyed golf the first time he played.

He thought it a fine game.

He found pleasure and exercise and companionship when it took him 126 to go around the course. He dreamed of the day when he could do it in 100. He would indeed be a happy man then. He was the first day; after that he was miserable until he had accomplished a 99. That done he has been happy for one afternoon. To be happy in golf, he thought, a man must improve his play just a little. He would be entirely happy and contented when he could shoot the course in 90.

He can do that now, but is he happy? He is not. Every time he takes eight for a hole he flies into a temper and becomes the most miserable man alive.

Golf is a queer game. The same man who got pleasure out of a whole string of eights and nines a few years ago, is the same man who now thinks an eight a blight and curse.—Detroit Free Press.

British Cultivated Land.

Cultivated land in England and Wales is now about the same as the pre-war area, but permanent pastures are less extensive, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture. The cultivated land has been decreasing since 1918, when it amounted to 12,899,000 acres. It now amounts to 11,311,000 acres, compared with 11,835,000 acres in 1912. Permanent pastures now occupy 14,715,000 acres, compared with 14,589,000 acres in 1918 and with 15,939,000 acres in 1912.

12 Major Improvements at No Advance in Price

Fifty thousand Jewett owners testify that Jewett Six is the most car for the money that has ever been built! Now—the NEW JEWETT SIX tops all former achievements!

Here are twelve important improvements which add sensibly to Jewett Six's value, sturdiness, comfort and completeness. Read what the NEW JEWETT SIX now gives you in addition to its established superiorities. More than ever Jewett Six now dominates the $1000 class.

1. Large brake drums. Now 14 inches in diameter. Added strength, absolute safety. 18.21 pounds per square inch of braking surface. More than any car its size.
2. Heavier, stronger wheels. More bolts. Larger spokes. A 25% greater margin of safety than ever offered in a car this size.
3. Positive pressure chassis lubrication, using oil not grease. Avoids the mess of grease cups. Masters squeaks. Insures long life in all working chassis parts.
4. Improved valve mechanism—runs in bath of oil—is practically noiseless and will long outwear usual design. Experienced motorists particularly will approve.
5. Improved Rayfield carburetor. Increases gasoline mileage about 10%. Gives smoother, faster action in get-away with no sign of "fuss."
6. New position of gear-shift lever; now immediately under driver's hand—no reaching.
7. New type of spark and throttle control. Smart in appearance; safer; more convenient. A distinct improvement that appeals to all drivers.
8. New instrument board assembling instruments in oval panel. More convenient, quicker, easier vision day or night. Compact; neater in appearance.
9. New type non-glaring reflectors in headlights. Legal everywhere. Reduces annoyance for oncoming drivers. Provides wonderful illumination.
10. Thicker and more comfortable upholstery in open models. Easy spring action, soft cushion effect, a delight to women.
11. Deeper front seats with back tilted to give easier driving posture; longer leg room. A really restful, easy car to ride in.
12. New pattern velour upholstery on standard Sedan models. Makes a rich looking car.

In addition to these twelve improvements, and refinements too numerous to mention, you get in this NEW JEWETT SIX the same sparkling performance that won a nation. Its full 50 horsepower Paige-built motor fills the hood. It drives from 2 to 60 miles an hour in high. Picks up from 5 to 25 miles an hour in 7 seconds, in high gear. Passes most any car on any hill.

High-pressure, hollow crankshaft oiling system—the same as used on the big Paige and other top-quality cars—insures long motor life. Two gallons of oil per minute are forced through all main and connecting rod bearings.

For a year and a half Jewett Six has been out-performing other cars. Jewett Six buyers are enthusiastic. Now—with 12 important improvements, and a host of refinements the NEW JEWETT SIX is far and away the most sensational value the market affords.

Drive one of these NEW JEWETT SIXES. Let your wife drive. All Jewett dealers are ready to show you. A telephone call will arrange a demonstration. Be among the first!

BANANA SONG NETS $60,000.

One Million Copies of Fruit Song Already Sold.

"Yes, We Have No Bananas" is a $60,000 tune.

When a squawking fruit hawker disturbed the late morning sleep of Frank Silver, leader of a jazz band in a New York food and noise emporium, he started something. Silver and his pianist, Irving Cohan, banded together and fashioned a rib from the fruit vender's plaintive plea, made a life-sized song bit. It will net them between $50,000 and $60,000.

The piece has already sold into 1,000,000 copies and it is estimated casually that another 1,000,000 copies will be sold.

Stacks of phonograph records like all the cakes in all the Childs' restaurants have been purchased. The music rolls for player-pianos, pasted together would be nearly as long as an expense account.

It is the first piece Silver and Cohan ever sold. They had written many before. When they took it to a prominent publisher he offered them the usual $200 advance. They were so sure they had a hit they held out for an advance of $1000 and they got it. They get a royalty of 2 cents a copy, also a royalty from each record and music roll sold.

WORLD FIGHT AGAINST INSECT.

Causes Tremendous Loss of Human Life—How They Multiply.

The menace to human life and the enormous property loss caused by insects is treated in the following paragraph by a noted authority.

A pair of bool weevils, it is estimated, have a progeny of 12,600,000 in a single season. These insects illustrate the savagery of the pests. They are credited with destroying 6,000,000 bales of cotton in the southern States last year; and despite national campaign of some years against them, the war has been a steadily losing one. President Harding wrote in March that the weevils threaten "the whole world with such a shortage of textile fibres as would constitute a universal calamity."

Insects cause a tremendous loss of human life through the diseases they carry. They compel man to share his agricultural products with them. But even more pernicious than their attack on food is their poisoning of plants by transmitting plant diseases, the ravages of which are now admitted beyond control. Even the busy bee, one of man's best friends, to whom he is indebted for the multiplication of food plants and trees, is unwittingly aiding the attackers. For man dare not spray flowering vegetation with fungicides sufficiently lest he poison the food supply of the bee.

Fortunately of more than 750,000 described living species of insects, less than half are destroyers of human life and property. A numerous group fights with man—the parasite insects that prey upon their kind. Yet even these parasites now have vicious enemies, known as hyper parasites, that kill off man's allies in the insect world. The pests are diabolically clever. Scientists say the lace wings, predatory in the larval stage, once laid their eggs in groups on leaves. The first member of the colony to come from an egg fell upon and devoured his unborn brothers and sisters. And so, under some mysterious law, the parent gradually acquired the habit of attaching each egg to the end of a slender thread, out of reach of her firstborn.

Barriers which formerly prevented the spread of noxious insects are gone. Deserts and mountain ranges are crossed by roads with carriers passing. They hide in cargoes and so journey across oceans. Governments of various countries have recognized the menace and are giving financial aid to war against them. Flame throwers are used against swarms of locusts in the south of France. Canada imports wasps to fight the corn borer. Airplanes are being used to spray gas, and efforts are bent toward learning which are the natural enemies of bandit insects and propagating against them.

It is not said that any person now living is likely to see the mobilization of humanity for decisive battle against insects—the dropping of all tasks and the coming to grips with marching caterpillars and bugs that reputable scientists have pictured as a probability. But the war is on, and so far those actively opposing the insect hordes are meeting defeat on nearly every sector.

—Ford motor number 8,000,000 went off the assembly line at the Ford Motor Company plant in Detroit July 11, it became known recently, establishing a new million production record. The last million motors have been produced in just six days less than six months, motor No. 7,000,000 having been turned out January 17. Production at the start of the last million was approximately 4,800 motors a day and on the increased schedule in effect since has been brought to more than 7,000.

Use of Scopolamine Would Violate Two Fundamental Rules of Common Law

By DR. GEORGE W. KIRCHWEY, Penologist.

SUPPOSE the suspect did tell the truth under the influence of scopolamine, the "drug-that-makes-you-tell-the-truth" that created such a sensation in San Quentin. Would evidence obtained through its use be admissible in a court of law? No.

Our system of law is accusatorial rather than inquisitorial. Men used to be tortured to make them confess. The rack and thumbscrew were used. The idea may have been at one time to get the truth, but the effect was to wring a confession from the victim.

The use of scopolamine might be classed as a mild form of torture; but, assuming that it does bring out the truth, it would violate two fundamental rules of our common law. The first of these is that the accused person may not be questioned after arrest or during a magisterial hearing, and the second is that torture may not be used to extort the truth.

In many European continental countries the magisterial function is inquisitorial. He questions the witness, heckles him, tries to wring the truth out of him.

In the English common law this is not done; it is not possible. Under our system the accused man cannot be questioned either preliminary to or during his trial. A confession may not be obtained from a man unless it is a free confession, given without fear or favor. Otherwise it cannot be produced in court. No immunity can be promised. A confession obtained under promise of immunity can't be introduced.

All that can be done is for the accused to be asked whether he wishes to make any statement, and even then the police official must caution him that anything he may say will be used against him. Indeed, we carry it to the point that the district attorney may not draw the attention of the jury to the fact that the accused did not take the witness stand. To do so is to furnish a basis for a new trial, and the higher court must grant a new trial.

Under the effects of scopolamine you will get the false and true, the fact and fantasy bubbling to the surface. If a man in his senses cannot be made to talk, how can he be made to talk by robbing him of his senses.

Consolidation Into Comparatively Few Systems of All the Railroads

By SENATOR A. B. CUMMINS, in Address to Iowa Legislature.

There is no man in this world who is more earnest than I am for the reduction of railway rates. I know how burdensome they are upon all industry, and especially upon a farmer who has been, and probably still is in many instances, selling his products at less than cost.

There is but one way, however, in my judgment, through which the whole body of rates can be materially reduced, and that way lies through a reduction in the cost of maintenance and operation. The wages of the railway workers constitute about 60 per cent of the total expense of maintenance and operation. With the present cost of living, it is my judgment railway wages cannot be and ought not to be, in justice, substantially lessened, and they may have to be increased. We cannot control, and ought not to control, the price of supplies.

There is but one way to reduce cost of operation materially, and it is by consolidating all the railroads into comparatively few systems, and while I cannot discuss that subject at this time I venture to say that with proper consolidation, and with efficient management, the railroads can render more and better service than they now render at a cost of $500,000,000 per year less than they now expend.

Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Canal, the South and the Cotton Boll Weevil

By JOSEPH O. THOMPSON, American Cotton Association.

In Chicago some day will be tremendous terminal warehouses for the storage of our cotton where it will be assembled for export by way of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence ship canal. The boll weevil is destroying in one year enough wealth to build this canal three or four times, the estimated cost of which is $240,000,000.

The South is tremendously interested in this project as there are parts of the world which would be reached at a cheaper freight rate by this route than by any other, and our interest is that it will afford another means of competition which is the life of the cotton as well as other trade.

There are 900,000,000 people in the world, some only partially clothed, who are depending upon the South to supply them. There is another group of 700,000,000, about 3 per cent of whom are coming into civilization annually by the wearing of clothes.

Senator Morgan said, in his speech, advocating the Isthmian canal, that one inch added to the shirt-tail of every Chinaman would make it profitable to grow 20,000,000 bales of cotton. The field for cotton production at a profitable price is without limit. First of all we must get rid of the boll weevil.

An Education and a Lesson in Geography to Last You All Your Life

By ARTHUR COBB, Jr., in Motor Life.

Frank as the observation may appear to the native sons of the state in which the climate is more salubrious, the sunshine brighter, and the moon larger than anywhere on earth, not all transcontinental tourists go West; not a few of them proceed in the other direction, to see what the rest of the country is like, and to be pleasantly surprised at the discovery that matchless beauty lies east of the Rockies.

But whether you go east or west, a trip across the American continent is an education and a lesson in geography that will last throughout the remainder of your life. We talk a lot these days about Americanism and the Americanization of various elements of our population. What a boon it would be to the solution of these problems if our worth-while citizenship material could be shown the length and breadth of the country from an automobile, the only conveyance suited to so all-inclusive a purpose.

Within the borders of the United States lie unexplored regions of scenic beauty that equal the best to be found anywhere on earth. Every mountain in Europe—from the snowcapped Alps of Switzerland to the Hartz of northern Germany—has its duplicate or superior here.

The Coward May Be Merely a Person With Small "Glands of Combat"

By DR. ADOLPH LORENZ, Famous Surgeon.

We are hearing much nowadays about adrenalin. The quality that makes some men ready for a fight or a frolic is due to the "glands of combat," the adrenals.

Once thought to be merely little lumps of fat, they were later found to take a very important part in the play of life forces. The active principle, or hormone, of this gland is adrenalin. It is thrown into your blood in a steady stream when the sensation of fear comes. Nature thus makes an effort to flood your body with the chemical basis of courage.

The coward, then, may be merely a person deficient in a reserve stock of this valuable substance of which valor is made. We know certain men who are always ready to fling themselves into a slugging match, even before the chip is knocked off their shoulders.

The Shattered Sevres Cup

By ROSE MEREDITH

(©, 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Hampton sat down to his solitary breakfast with a heart filled with resentment at the way Fate had treated him. Up to this morning he had gloried in his bachelor freedom, he had explained airily to his married friends the carefree life of the unshackled male. He said that he arose when he liked, lunched when he liked, and came home as late as he wished, and no one cared. He was happy and contented.

He had said it all last night to Harry Baker, as Harry drove him home from a little family dinner party at the Baker home.

"Yes," muttered Mr. Baker reflectively, as they whirred along under the stars, "I'll bet nobody cares a whoop whether you come home at night early or late, or whether you come home at all! No light in the window for you, old man, oh, no! Just a dim light in the hall, and paid servants awaiting your call. Just wait awhile, you'll get tired of it all!"

In spite of his warm protests to the contrary, Philip Hampton had arisen this morning with a sense of something denied him. He thought of the warm welcome that awaited Harry Baker, remembered the light in Edith Baker's eyes when she met her husband and his guest at the station, remembered the little flock of youngsters who came tumbling from the house to greet them, little warm, clean boys and girls.

The dining room looked very cheerful. There was a touch of frost outside and a little fire crackled on the hearth. There was old mahogany, blue china and brass on the white mantelpiece, a glitter of glass and silver from the sideboard, a bowl of chrysanthemums in the center of the table. All the chairs were vacant except his own armchair, drawn up to the table, where Betsy had placed a delectable breakfast. He had eaten his fruit and cereal and now removed the cover from the silver dish before him, revealing delicate strips of bacon—Betsy brought in a plate of waffles and departed.

Philip scowled at the empty chairs and attacked the bacon savagely. He finished his coffee and stared moodily into his empty cup. It was a large cup of Sevres—his cousin Agatha had selected that set of breakfast china when he announced his intention of buying a place in the suburbs and settling up his lonely home therein. He had only been there two weeks, and he was bored to death. He was as lonely as he could be! He would return to town—live at his club or a hotel, where one would not miss family life.

Voices sounded from the place next door. There was a boy in there, about ten years old. Philip had a speaking acquaintance with the family. He was used to the boy's voice, but now there was a man's deep voice calling them to breakfast. He could imagine that other breakfast table, happy and full of talk.

Betsy came in and at his request opened the window. When he was alone again he still listened for the voices.

"Rose—Rose—catch it! Ow!" in a mournful boyish howl. Crash!

Straight through the open window the ball flew, skimmed across the bowl of chrysanthemums and found a refuge in the big Sevres coffee cup at Philip's elbow. The cup rocked uncertainly, and then with a quiet tinkle of splintered shards the cup fell apart on the saucer and the brand-new baseball rested on the debris.

Hampton was angry. He jumped up and went to the window. He would speak sharply to the boy and impress him with the fact that a suburban lawn was no place in which to play baseball.

He leaned from the window and confronted two startled faces.

The boy, Jimmy, was staring up from the other side of the hedge, his round freckled face pale with fright. Beside him was an angel in a pale blue frock.

"Gee, I'm sorry, Mr. Hampton," chattered the boy.

Hampton Was Angry.

"I am afraid it is my fault, Mr. Hampton," said the angel in just the sweet low voice he admired in women. "Jimmy told me to catch the ball, and I didn't. I hope it did not harm anything."

"Nothing at all," lied Philip handsomely. "Just dropped into my empty coffee cup. Play ball, Jimmy," he called and pitched the ball out to the relieved small boy.

"Now Rose, don't you go and take all the blame—she always does that, Mr. Hampton, she's my cousin, you know—I bred the ball too high—no girl could catch that!"

They laughed together over that, and Hampton stepped out of the window and down to the lawn so that he might talk to them more easily. Rose Ashe was telling him about a long motor trip they had taken the preceding day, when Betsy appeared at the window. She did not see Miss Ashe, but at the sound of her voice Philip turned.

"Oh, Mr. Hampton, somepin done broke you pin chaney cup all to splinters—I declar to man I never teched it—looka here, seh!" She reached out a black arm and displayed the Sevres saucer with its burden of shattered cup.

"Never mind, Betsy—throw it away. It was an accident," he said, turning red under the clear-eyed gaze of the two cousins.

"You were saying that you stopped at Far Falls?" he reminded her.

"I am so sorry about the cup" she answered.

"It is nothing—please do not distress yourself," he was beginning, when Jimmy darted toward his home and reappeared, dragging his father.

"Come in and breakfast with us," he said cordially, after explanations had been made. "We are late this morning—had a long ride yesterday, and everybody laid abed. I think my wife is coming now."

Philip thought of the hearty breakfast he had eaten, but he decided not to count it as a meal—it was too lonely, besides.

"With pleasure," he accepted. "I will be with you in a moment. He darted into the house and discovered the fragments of the cup on the table. He wrapped them in a table napkin and locked them in his desk in the next room. Then he joined the Ashe family and went in to form one of the happy, talkative group about the breakfast table.

It was just as he had imagined. He grew younger by leaps and bounds. Instead of being thirty-four years old, he felt just about Jimmy's age when he parted company with his new friends.

"You don't want to sell your place, Hampton?" asked Mr. Ashe suddenly. "I know a man who is anxious to come down here."

"No, indeed—I'm going to settle down here for good," said Philip, "providing Jimmy promises not to break all my cups."

"Aw, gee, Mr. Hampton," grinned Jimmy.

Before Mr. Hampton departed for business he surveyed his appearance in his mirror. "I need some new clothes," he decided gravely, "and some ties and a lot of things. This scarf I have on is all wrong—I suppose she noticed it—girls always do—" He fell dreaming over girls in general and one in particular. His train whistled in the distance and departed without him.

"It will be convenient for her to be so near her cousins," he burst out suddenly, then he laughed aloud, and picking up his hat went whistling out of the house.

"Mister Hampton done been most cheerful after dat cup was broke," vouchsafed Betsy in the kitchen.

"Oh, gwan—tain't cups that's worryin' him—it's jest girls."

Worthy of High Place.

Long ago Queen Elizabeth of the Belgians studied the condition of her people, acquiring knowledge which stood her later in good stead. Shortly after her marriage she showed the spirit of humanity by working in the slums of the poorer districts of Brussels and establishing hospitals in many places in Belgium, besides acting as the leader of an association of women who strove to improve the condition of the poorer classes.

"Who was that, my dear?" asked her companion.

"My husband, once removed," replied the grass widow.

POST IN REGULAR MEETING.

Commander Leon R. Smith Resigns—Report of Committees.

A regular meeting of W. Earle Champaign Post, No. 84, The American Legion, was held August 2, at the Legion Home, Post Commander Leon R. Smith presiding. Comrade B. F. Jones acted as post chaplain.

The minutes of the preceeding meeting were read and approved. The House Committee reported a profit of $56.78 for the month of July on the operation of the building, and $38.65 realized on dances. Gail Olmstead reported a profit of nearly $175 from merry-go-round and stand.

Emory Rockwell reported for the building committee that no news is available of Contractor Erwine, and the bonding company is trying to get him to pay, but have so far been unsuccessful. Several improvements have been made in the interior of the building.

It was resolved that the officers of the Post be authorized to borrow $500 from the First National Bank, by renewing note, and to make such additional renewals as are necessary, for three months periods.

It was resolved that the officers of the Post be authorized to renew a note at the Tioga County Savings & Trust Company for $1,900, and make such additional renewals for three months periods as are necessary.

It was resolved that the officers of the Post be authorized to renew a note to the Wellsboro Electric Co. for $800, and to make such additional renewals as are necessary.

Post Commander Leon R. Smith announced that delegates to the department convention at Reading should be elected at this meeting. Comrades B. F. Jones and Homer Wilkinson were appointed tellers, and after counting the ballots announced the following elections: Emory Rockwell, delegate; Robert D. Mason, delegate; Fay Rumsey, alternate; Verne O. Field, alternate.

It was announced that all prior liens on the Pearl street building having been satisfied, the bonds were now a first lien, and the bonds issued by the Post over the sum of $10,000 had all been destroyed in the presence of P. L. Brooks, Post Finance Officer, and C. E. Bennett, representing the Tioga County Savings & Trust Company, trustee for the bond holders.

Comrade Geo. B. Logan announced that he had received an offer from a group of semi-professional players to put on a play in the Legion Building for the joint benefit of the Legion and the D. A. R. of Williamsport. After considering the proposition, a committee of three, consisting of Edith Lewis, chairman, Henry Husted and Robert Roy, were appointed to investigate the play and report their recommendation at the next meeting.

Post Commander Leon R. Smith announced the death of Comrade Elias Merrick, who died in Chatham township during the past month. He was one of the last Civil War veterans in his community, and at the request of the family a squad from the Post had attended the funeral and conducted the service at the grave, in accordance with the Legion ritual.

Much to the regret of all, Comrade Leon R. Smith then announced that, as he is about to remove from Wellsboro, it became necessary for him to resign at Post Commander. Comrade Smith expects to go south for a time, probably to Florida. His resignation was accepted, and by motion duly carried, First Vice Commander B. F. Jones was directed to take over the duties of the Post Commander for the time being.

The following orders were made on the Post Finance Officer, being designated by orders No. 142 to 148, inclusive:

First National Bank, interest and partial principal on note	$ 44.89
F. L. Smith, Treasurer Community Nursing Ass'n	10.00

FIVE MILLION TREES PLANTED.

State Nurseries Supply That Number for Reforestation.

Figures compiled by the State Department of Forests and Waters show that this spring 22 owners of forest land set out a total of 183,478 forest trees in Tioga County. Reports indicated that most of these trees are growing well and in time they will produce excellent lumber. In Lycoming County 24 tree planters set out 38,548 forest trees and in Potter County 14 different owners of forest land planted 30,242 forest trees.

More trees would have been planted in the State but the entire nursery output was exhausted early in the season. Orders were placed for more than seven million trees, but the State nurseries could supply only 5,075,045 forest trees to the 1,401 private forest land owners in all parts of the State who planted trees. In spite of the nursery shortage this was the largest number ever sent out in a single planting season. The nursery output was more than 100 times greater than the total shipment 10 years ago. The forest trees planted this spring reforested more than 5,000 acres of idle land. Upon reaching maturity they will produce approximately 75 million board feet of lumber that is urgently needed by the people and industries of the State.

—The party of Thomas A. Edison, while passing through Williamsport Friday, were informed that Canton was a town of forty-five thousand inhabitants, with excellent hotel accommodations. The party went on to Carlisle and spent the night. They are on their way to meet Henry Ford at Jamestown, N. Y. The party consists of Mr. and Mrs. Edison and Mrs. J. V. The Minstrel Show Arrived.

Last Wednesday evening our townsmen were entertained by singing and dancing rendered by the advance guard of "Hughes-for-Judge campaigners."

The good people were treated to various selections of popular songs such as "Barney Google," "Yes, We Have No Bananas," etc., and just before Candidate Hughes made his appearance in the pergola, they were entertained by a buck and wing dancer. Mr. Hughes then spoke to the audience, giving his reasons why he thought he should be elected the next Judge of Tioga county. He remarked that he and Judge Marsh were personal friends and were going to continue to be so, and in the discourse he found no fault with Judge Marsh or with his administration. After his remarks he passed down through the audience shaking hands with the assemblage while the singers sang, "Let the Rest of the World Go By."

The buck and wing dancing was fine and the young dancer put forth every effort to please his audience, but many of the good people assembled felt that perhaps the dancing would have been more appropriate as an outside attraction for the minstrel show than for the entertainment of those who had gathered together to hear a serious discussion as to why there should be a change of Judges in our county.

We sincerely hope that the electorate of Tioga county has more important matters upon its mind than that of changing Judges at this time, inasmuch as Judge Marsh is giving such universal satisfaction.—Knoxville Courier.
